Afternoon Tea

The History of Tea

There are several legends about the origins of tea. One of them tells us how, some five thousand years ago in China, the Emperor Shen Nung, worried about the epidemic diseases gave order to have all the water boiled before its consumption.

*One day the Emperor and his court visited one of the distant regions over which he ruled and he ordered his train to stop so that they could rest for a while. The servants had just started to boil the water, when some leaves coming from nearby bushes and floating in the wind fell into the water container. Gradually the water acquired a nut-brown color. When the Emperor tasted this strange infusion, he was surprised by its pleasant flavor and from that moment on he and his people became adepts of tea. And this is how the first tea cup appeared. The tree that provided those leaves was called camellia sinensis,*

One also says that this was the same legendary Emperor who initiated the natural or herbal medicine and that introduced agriculture in the country. On his "treaty on Food" he wrote: "The tea invigorates the body, nourishes the spirit and reinforces the will, when taken at long term".

All of our teas are prepared with bottled water. To free the aroma, the teas have each one a specific time of infusion. In order to respect it, the teapot will be presented after the infusion time is complete.
